Dear Orin:

Will you and Jill please accept my sincere apologies for not having congratulated you on your addition to the family before this late date, and also for not having thanked you for your Christmas card? We absolutely fell down on the job on Christmas cards this year and delayed our actions along those lines until it was entirely too late to expect people overseas to receive them. Sue and I both hope that Jill and the baby are doing well and you know that you can always call on us for anything you might need from the States that we might assist you with.

I have been on a trip to the West Coast and this, together with a lot of other activities, has kept me from writing you more frequently. I expect to be off again in the not too distant future for approximately a month, and upon my return plan to visit you and the other installation in your direction. I expect that this will be sometime during March.

[redacted] has returned to duty and I have had a long and very frank talk with him. I sincerely hope that he will fit into our scheme of things and that his conduct will not be such as to cause me to question his continued employment in this organization. He appears to be a very fine editor, and I should hate to lose him because of his personal habits.

Please give my best to the other members of the staff and to your family.

Sincerely,
